RE: Community Stakeholders

Dear Mr. Simpson:

Thank you for your acknowledgment of the most recent correspondence between Textron's consultant Mactec, and the Adelaide Avenue Environmental Justice Coalition. The group works hard to compile the collective spirit of the different communities impacted by your site. We have a panel of members whose assigned tasks are specifically to compile data and information, which can be crafted into correspondence with other stakeholders; and responsible parties, such as Textron, Churchill & Banks, and the City of Providence.

In regard to reaching out to our school families, Future Parents Group for the Adelaide Avenue High School, we suggest Textron attain the list of children assigned to the school from the City. We have been attempting (for some time) to procure a complete list of the families assigned to the Adelaide Avenue School, but to no avail. The City continues to tell the community they haven't compiled the list as of this date. Everyone concurs with you though; those of us whose children will attend the new facility should be notified, and at the very least briefed on the steps being taken to safeguard their children's health on your site. Perhaps Textron will have more success than the community, accessing the student mailing list from the City of Providence.

With respect to the community action group Concerned Citizens of the Reservoir Triangle and South Providence; the most efficient method of reaching these folks would be through Senator Juan Pachado's office and Representative Thomas Slater's office. Both can be found at the state house, and both have been extremely supportive and helpful since the City, in its infinite wisdom, decided to place a school on your hazardous waste site. These elected officials have mailing lists for the communities that you need to reach out to, and continue to keep informed. We have worked with the Senator in the past concerning informational sessions and community meetings, and have found this to be an exceptional conduit for reaching the people who want to participate in this most important process.

Sincerely,

Robert F. L. Dorr
